

Taxable Amount for Tax Paid at Source Deduction

Businesses that pay sales tax on purchases of material that they later resell may take a “taxable amount for tax paid at source” deduction on their excise tax return. The deduction is based on the amount paid for the materials, not including the sales tax. It’s important to note that sales tax must still be collected on the total price of the item or contract when the materials are resold.

Read through the following sample question and example to see how the deduction works.

Q: I’m a custom contractor. I recently bought lumber and paid sales tax at the time of purchase. Later, I built a fence with that lumber and collected sales tax. Is there a way to get the sales tax I paid back from my purchase of that lumber?

A: Yes. In order to be paid back for the sales tax that you paid originally, you can take what is called a “taxable amount for tax paid at source” deduction on your return.

Example:

ABC Company purchased lumber for $100 from a Seattle store, plus sales tax of $9.50 (rate of 9.5%).

State portion of sales tax: $6.50 ($$100 \times 6.5\%$ or 0.065)

Local portion of sales tax: $3.00 ($$100 \times 3.0\%$ or 0.030)

ABC was later hired to build a fence in Tacoma using the lumber purchased in Seattle. The total amount earned for the contract was $500, plus $46.50 in sales tax (rate of 9.3%).

State portion of sales tax: $32.50 ($$500 \times 6.5\%$ or 0.065)

Local portion of sales tax: $14.00 ($$500 \times 2.8\%$ or 0.028)

This is how the deduction would look on your return.
